Quick Explanation

A commission payment method tells the platform where your affiliate earnings should be sent.

Depending on the available options, you may be able to receive your commissions through PayPal, bank transfer or another supported payout provider.

In short:

- Open your affiliate payment settings.
- Choose your preferred payout method.
- Enter your payment details carefully.
- Save your configuration.
- Receive eligible commissions when payouts are processed.

Before You Start

Before adding a payment method, make sure your account information is complete and accurate. Payment details must match the information required by the payout provider to avoid failed or delayed transfers.

You should also verify that you have already generated eligible affiliate commissions or that your account is ready to receive future payments.

- Check that your profile information is complete.
- Prepare your PayPal email or bank details.
- Use accurate personal or business information.
- Make sure your payment account is active.
- Review the payout rules of your affiliate program.

Open Your Commission Payment Settings

To add a method for receiving commissions, go to your account settings and open the section dedicated to affiliate commission payments.

This is where you can choose how you want to be paid and update your payment details whenever necessary.

Tip

Always double-check that you are editing the affiliate commission payment settings, not the customer billing settings. These are different areas of your account.

Choose Your Preferred Payment Method

After opening the payment settings, choose the method you want to use to receive your affiliate commissions.

The most common options are PayPal and bank transfer, but the available methods can depend on your country, your account status and the currencies involved.

- PayPal: usually simple and fast to configure.
- Bank transfer: useful if you prefer receiving money directly into your bank account.
- Other providers: may be available depending on the platform and region.

If you are unsure which method to choose, start with the option that is easiest for you to verify and maintain.

Enter Your Payment Information

Once you have selected your preferred payout method, carefully enter all the required payment information. Even a small mistake can delay your commission payments or cause a transfer to fail.

Depending on the payment provider, you may be asked to provide different types of information.

- Email address associated with your PayPal account.
- Account holder's full name.
- Bank account number or IBAN.
- BIC / SWIFT code.
- Bank name.
- Country and billing information.

Recommendation

Before saving your payment method, carefully review every field. Correct payment details help ensure that future affiliate commissions are processed without delays.

Save and Verify Your Configuration

After entering your payment information, save your settings and verify that your payment method appears correctly in your affiliate account.

If your payment provider requires account verification, complete that process before expecting to receive commission payouts.

Taking a few extra minutes to confirm everything is configured correctly can help prevent payment issues later.

Updating Your Payment Method

If your payment information changes, update your affiliate payout settings as soon as possible. This includes situations such as changing your PayPal email address, opening a new bank account or updating your business information.

Keeping your payment details current ensures that future commissions continue to reach the correct destination.

Best Practices

- Double-check all payment information before saving it.
- Use an active payment account that you can access easily.
- Update your payout details whenever your banking information changes.
- Review your affiliate payment settings regularly.
- Keep copies of payment confirmations for your records.
- Protect your payment accounts with strong passwords and two-factor authentication whenever available.

Frequently Asked Questions

Can I change my payment method later?

Yes. You can update your payment method whenever necessary by returning to your affiliate payment settings and saving your new information.

Why haven't I received my commissions yet?

Commissions may still be within the validation period, your payment details may need updating or the minimum payout threshold may not have been reached.

Can I receive payments in different currencies?

This depends on the payment provider and the affiliate platform. Some payment methods support multiple currencies while others may require separate configurations.

Is my payment information secure?

Most affiliate platforms use secure connections to protect sensitive payment information. You should also secure your own accounts with strong passwords and multi-factor authentication whenever possible.
